

The health and wellbeing of the public, volunteers and staff are of utmost importance to the North Wales Wildlife Trust, and we have therefore been keeping a close eye on government advice in response to the coronavirus outbreak.

In recent days, we have been evaluating the services we provide involving social contact and making informed decisions about these given the current situation we are all in.

As of Tuesday 17 March, we regret to inform you that the majority of our events programme and volunteer activities are suspended for the foreseeable future.

We will ensure that our events listings on our website are updated as frequently as possible, and hope to re-start when we can. Please check in regularly! We'll still be updating our social media accounts, continuing to issue Wild Weekly and sharing fun and stimulating activities for families.

Stay close to nature

Our 36 nature reserves remain open and provide excellent places to unwind and take in the fresh air away from crowds. During this difficult time, it is more important than ever to maintain a connection with the natural world. Wildlife goes on, after all.
